Top 3 Visual Illusions of 2009

Published by wnu at 1:01 am under ::LISTS::, ::SCIENCE & PHILOSOPHY::, ::WEIRD::

Each year the Neural Correlate Society selects its favorite visual illusions, with a panel of judges narrowing the field to ten finalists and the three overall winners voted on by members of the society. The top three illusions of 2009 are:

1. The break of the curveball (Shapiro, Lu, Knight, Ennis). Compare the trajectory of the ball when viewed directly versus peripherally:

2. Color dove illusion (Barkan & Spitzer). Select a background color and focus on the black dot within the dove. The background disappears, but the color has a lingering effect:

3. The illusion of sex (Russell). A simple change of contrast alters our perception of the gender of this face:

In elementary school, when I was a boy, I had a book of illusions. I was so proud to be able to make this one:

(a) < ---->

(b) >—<

Which line is longer? It doesn't work so well on a screen, only paper, back then I knew only the world of paper, so it worked every time.

These illusions give new meaning to the phrase “my eyes are playing tricks on me.”
